Enhancing Survey Insight and Effectiveness

The objective is to develop an internal analytics tool that helps surveyors and research teams extract meaningful insights from survey responses and improve survey quality. Potential approaches include data visualisation, machine learning, unsupervised learning, and large language models (LLMs), though other methods may also be applied.

The tool will support surveyors in understanding respondent behaviour, identifying weaknesses in survey design, and synthesising insights from both structured and unstructured responses. Ultimately, the solution aims to transform raw survey data into actionable, interpretable intelligence that can be used in day-to-day survey operations.

Problem Statement

Creating a prototype that assists companies in analysing survey responses, improving survey design, and generating actionable insights for internal uses.

The solution should allow users to:

- Identify patterns, correlations, or redundancies in survey questions that suggest opportunities for improvement
- Understand factors associated with partial or incomplete survey responses
- Discover meaningful demographic or behavioural segments among respondents

- Extract insights from the applicant's perspective on what drives employer attractiveness
- Automatically synthesise and present insights in a clear and interpretable format, potentially using LLMs
